FRIENDSHIP VETERAN FIRE ASSOCIATION

The meeting hall overhead contains furniture built by one Jimmy Green, an Alexandrian cabinet maker and furniture builder of a century ago, especially for the veteran organization. Its present appearance speaks exceedingly well for the skilled ability of the craftsmen of that day and time. The care-taker is Mr. Wm. H. Humphries, who for sixty years has stood ready to answer the call of duty when the red demon threatened life and property. Mark R. Norris and the present secretary, Mr. Nancefield are also veterans of some fifty-odd years service.

Mr. Humphries tells some thrilling stories of the old days in Alexandria, including an account of the run of the Friendship company to Washington when the Patent Office burned. He is an amiable host and any one wishing to inspect the historic equipment and interesting curiosities of ye olden time will be cordially entertained by the veteran fire-fighter.

Old Time Chair Is Rejuvenated by Black Satin and Bright Wool.

A black background gives bright wool embroidery a better chance to show to advantage than one of a neutral shade. That is why black cushions with colored designs worked on them are so effective.

To-day the accompanying sketch shows a chair and stool upholstered with black satin on which orange, rose and blue worsted flowers do much to make their surroundings cheerful.

Quaintly old fashioned is the chair pictured. How many housewives could revitalize some of their discarded articles in such a manner. Chairs that are passe can be made objects of decorative value, if nimble fingers will but fashion them a new dress.

A piece of satin may be bought and on it stamped (in white of course) any one of the many designs to be found in the needlework sections of the stores. In this work the nimble fingers will have an opportunity to play with colors as bright as they desire, for the charm of these designs lies in the brilliance of their hues.

The embroidery is not hard to do. Cross stitch may be employed, or when the design is rather large, as is the one shown to-day, long loose stitches will give the desired effect.
